The Vivisection of a Phrase

Repetition stands as the undergirding and prior state to any existing image. In two ways, either first a diversity has set for it something smaller that speaks to its entirety, or an unsmoothly little device gets used in a mass proliferation, and through the diversity of its use, conquers the larger. In the first instance, think of a desert island. We have associations, connections, images of it, but these can be pared down to a few aspects; sand, palm tree, shoreline. That islands of the literary description, "desert island" fail often to look this way or share any of these traits (mostly due to desert being read incorrectly as arid sandy with dunes, not desert of human beings) is not only another example of the over-bearing truth we attribute to semblance, but is a product of the repetition, of the production and distribution of images.

The second instance is the instance that this book attempts to understand, and undergo. The line to be undergone is familiar. "A million dollars isn't cool. You know what's cool? A billion dollars." It's from the facebook film, Justin Timberlake says it. Particularly, he says the image of it, the quote of it. The difference between the quote and the material source is that of most pithy phrases, a slight fracture, a rhythm, multiple voices through which hundreds of thousands are able to only hear. But hearing isn't the issue, it's speaking. You can find the original, or a repetition in text, at number 48 in the original 52 variations that follow, but its crucial exceptions from the original phrase are an interjection and a switch of voices. What made the phrase the image it was, the image-essence heard by these hundreds thousands, is the need to repeat the phrase in a particular quoting practice, one that emphasizes the performance around the pure spoken words instead of a more story-telling tradition that plays with illuminating the environment. Not forgetting it, but let's be stone-faced enough to say that there's no reason this isn't the true one, to say that we believe in the image-essence of the phrase so repeated, stripped of its false two-voices. Contingent essence can embrace itself only by undergoing the stupidity of its own project.

This last notion is the notion of the project. This arose as a result of discussing translation and the translator's responsibility with my friend Felipe Martinez and reading bpNichol's Translating Translating Apollinaire. The concept seemed right, but it was still working between the intelligible translation of languages, and the experiment seemed less about the limits of language as the limits and productivity of alternative voices. Experimentalism of this kind is defining for the next capitalist and next technician their most productive new technique. Instead, I wanted to myself undergo the production of the image by thinking through the second trajectory: the growth from an image, mass reproduced through multiple sensation, repeated through memory and refined to single shared phrase. I have here tried to take the simplest form of the phrase, the existing essence of it, "A million dollars isn't cool. You know what's cool? A billion dollars." and explore all the possible variations, running backward through the production of an image in order to feel how its organs move.

Organization and Program

The first part of the book is the fifty-two variations that I came up with. These fifty-two are what occurred to me with some thinking, occurred to my eye to be ways of putting it, or occurred in response to several other similar experiments that I was able to track down. They are not the limit of the possible in the sense that the variables of the phrase were identified and set to run to their limit, like if a computer did it. They are instead the aesthetic horizon, that which was possible to occur to my eye in response to the phrase at the point of this undertaking.

The second part of the book is the fifty-third variation. Once the fifty-two were set, I took them as the horizon, and the fifty-third seeks to elaborate each of the previous fifty-two in their implicit logic. In some instances, the divergence was a one-off and there was no elaboration or repetition possible, but in most there were at least one or two and sometimes dozens of iterations that could be elaborated. This was a much more mechanistic program than the first fifty-two, with the pleasure of it found in the way the different regimes mix and sometimes become incompatible, sometimes flourish into something that wasn't predicted by any of the original schemes. This fifty-third variation has within it certain sections off-set, if it seemed good to do so, but the book as a whole should be considered of two parts, 52 Variations and 53.

The numbers in 53 are three-part (eg 53.14.3) and should be read as follows. The first number is 53, that means it's part of the fifty-third variation. The second number is which of the first fifty-two it is elaborating or repeating. The third number is which of the elaborations or repetitions of that first-fifty-two it is. The first of each is a pure repetition of that first fifty-two (eg variation 12 and 53.12.1 look identical). With three exceptions, the fifty-third variation runs in the same order as the first fifty-two.

The exceptions are three variations that were recursive to the structure of each example of the phrase. Number twelve replaces the more colloquial "a million" with the number word "one million". Variation nineteen removes the article altogether, "A billion / One billion" becomes "billion". Number thirty-five reverses the ordering of million and billion, so that "a million dollars isn't cool, you know what's cool, a billion dollars" becomes "a billion dollars isn't cool, you know what's cool, a million dollars." When these occur within the fifty-third variation, I have listed their corresponding possibilities up through all the variations previous to it, and each subsequent variation at the end of the corresponding next variation. Because some variations cannot take the twelfth, nineteen or thirty-fifth variation, the third number in these corresponds only to the number of their own variation and not to the variation altered (eg 53.12.46 is the 46th elaboration or repetition of variation 12, but that elaboration or repetition modifies 53.51, not 53.46).

It has been a privilege to undergo and understand this phrase in such depth. I hope it is as rewarding for you, the reader.

Men in little lives in old neighborhoods

53.44 After meeting, I left Lebanon in over nine days. Others left little after, retired spies, indigents, scientifics, naturalists. Then came others, otherwise legal Yankees, otherwise undesirables, kingpins, now over-watched. We hated all this strife, communities overturned, offices looted. A building's insides, lower levels, its openings: naught.

53.12.39 Occasions need every moment, in leaving, lieu, in overcoming narrow drives, overcoming lazy legalistic arrangements, retreating something inside something not there. Cravings or other limits, younger, older undercurrents, keep needling our worlds. We, however, after time sours, crave other, older lies. Only necessity ever breathes in lies, lies in our needing distraction, or leading lives against reality's stain.

53.19.40 Minimalism is literature. Literature is overwound, never deep, overwrought, little literatures again retires, so impotent, so narcissistic. Try creating openings, or leave behind idiotic literalism. Let invention overturn nightmare, dream overturn literacy. Literature as rotten syncope.

53.35.44 After bleeding, I left Lebanon in over nine days. Others left little after, retired spies, indigents, scientifics, naturalists. Then came other, otherwise legal Yankees, otherwise undesirables, kingpins, now over watched. We hated all this strife, communities overturned, offices looted. A movement's insides, lower levels, its openings: naught.

SEAN

A million dollars isn’t cool.
You know what’s cool?

EDUARDO

You?

CUT BACK TO:

INT. FIRST DEPOSITION ROOM - DAY

EDUARDO

A billion dollars.

53.48.2 "A million dollars isn't cool, you know what's cool?" said Sean Parker.

"You?" said Eduardo Saverin sarcastically. The film cuts to a deposition room. Eduardo, now relating the story just before being visualized, continues, speaking the Sean Parker line. "A billion dollars."
